Couple Creates Comprehensive Tourism Website

Belleville, Illinois, August 6, 2007 – When Paul and Laurie Lindauer traveled, they would spend hours searching the Internet for unique and interesting attractions along their planned route. Frustrated by the lack of a single, searchable resource of tourism destinations in the United States, the Lindauers of Belleville, Illinois, created their own website using state-of-the-art GPS technology to pinpoint everything from attractions and landmarks to restaurants and shopping malls.

Paul is so committed to the creation of the website, named GuidepostUSA.com, that he recently quit his job to dedicate all of his time to the development of a comprehensive, user-friendly database of all of America's destinations.

“To compile this all-inclusive listing with the geographic tracking feature is a monumental task,” said Lindauer, “But, with the frequency of domestic travel by retirees, families, groups and businesspeople, there is a real need for the site. We are looking forward to using the site ourselves for our next family trip!”

At www.GuidepostUSA.com, travelers can use a large number of search criteria to locate specific attractions of interest along a given route (including interstate highways), as well as in specific communities or regions. GuidepostUSA™ lists museums, art galleries, golf courses, wineries, antique shops, restaurants, bed and breakfasts, parks, hotels, resorts, amusement parks, farms, historical and cultural landmarks, botanical gardens, visitor centers, zoos and more.

While the Lindauers are identifying destinations nationwide, any tourism site operator or destination may create their own free basic listing on the GuidepostUSA™ website by logging onto www.GuidepostUSA.com. Premium listings, offering a webpage of detailed information including email and website links, photos, logos and more, are available with an annual subscription of $50.
